

Lager Vs Ale

WHILE most drinkers love the light flavours of a wheat beer, there are still those who are unable to appreciate a full-bodied stout. But with the vast number of international labels available in the market, the enthusiasm to learn more about the varieties of beer is on the rise. For this reason, All Things Nice, a platform for consumers interested in wines, luxury spirits and gourmet food, is organising a beer-tasting at Woodside – All Day Bar & Eatery, on February 10.

“The more you know about something, the more you tend to appreciate it,” says Nikhil Agarwal, founder of All Things Nice, who will be conducting the session. “The tasting will go beyond regular beers available in India and will aim to educate consumers about the brew’s history, its varieties and help people decide their preference,” he says.

The session, at Rs 955 per head, will include six different brews among which are Asahi from Japan, Erdinger from Germany and Liefman’s Frutesse from Belgium.
